Case # 17BK 03283-LTS
The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico
Claim #26492
$32,615.38

It is my understanding that they are seeking to confiscate the remainder of our original $75,000.00 investment in Bonds of the Government of Puerto Rico, which we got with our savings in order to have some measure of security during our old age. Over the years, that amount has been diluted by different financial effects that we will never fully understand. At the suggestion of UBS, part of the investment was transferred to Cofina Bonds that were funded with the sales tax that we pay every day.

To us, the amount of the original investment that we have left is very important, given our old age of 79 and 68 years old, respectively. There are many medical and care expenses that we will have to face.

We do not understand what the Omnibus Objection is that seeks to take away from me what is left of my investment. Releasing the government of PR from paying this debt at the expense of the citizens that entrusted their money to the government of PR is incomprehensible, considering that the government continues to charge us that tax through our purchases.

I must establish that I have not received any compensation for the money transferred to Cofina. Considering the millions of dollars that, according to the news, had been reserved for the debtors in whatever measure applicable, I would like to know who received compensation and who did not. I wonder if the objectors were punished and those who did not object were compensated. Or worse, whether we were discriminated against for being residents of PR.

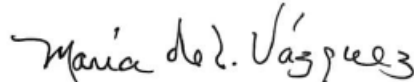

Under current conditions, I understand not receiving the remainder of our investment immediately, but it would be fair for us to receive it through some plan to be proposed to us to that effect.

Another question that I would appreciate an answer to is, if the government of PR is not responsible, then who is? Where do I need to go? What happened with the reserve accrued for these purposes?

Please find attached copies of our previous objection. We appreciate your consideration to this matter, so that at least we might have some favorable resolution.

Cordially,

Eddie Montalvo
